Immune Formula is a product that has been winning the hearts of Nature's Sunshine customers for years with its original composition. In each capsule of the dietary supplement, you will find mushrooms that are well-known from Chinese medicine, such as caterpillar fungus, hen-of-the-woods and lingzhi. The composition is supplemented by beta-glucans from Saccharomyces cerevisiae yeast, arabinogalactan from Larix spp. larch and colostrum.

CORDYCEPS

MAITAKE

REISHI

Caterpillar fungus (Cordyceps sinensis), is a fungus from the Tibetan Plateau, also known as yartsa gunbu. The caterpillar fungus is particularly valued by experts in Chinese medicine, who classify it as one of the four most important substances and call it “the magic herb of Tibet.”

Hen-of-the-wood (Grifola frondosa), is typically known as the maitake mushroom, which is also particularly valued in Chinese medicine. It can be found growing on trunks of Japanese and North American trees.

Lingzhi (Ganoderma lucidum) is the well-known reishi mushroom. This is another ingredient of Immune Formula derived from Chinese medicine. The Chinese have known it for thousands of years as Ling Zhi and often call it the “plant of immortality.”

Beta-glucans are considered by modern science as one of the most important substances produced by fungi.

Arabinogalactan is a macromolecular polysaccharide biopolymer that is metabolized by the intestinal flora, which uses it to produce short-chain fatty acids.

Colostrum is also known as beestings, milk secreted by a cow in the first hours after birth. It has been very popular in the nutraceutical market for about 20 years.
